COQUETTE.

Then in a biss she breathed her various arts, of triding pretily with wounded hearts; A mind for love, but still a changing mind, The lisa effected, and the glance design'd; The sweet confusing blue, the secret wink, The gentle, swimming waik, the con trous sink The stare for strangeness fit, for scon the frow For decent yielding, looks declining down; The practical languish, where well-feign'd desir Would ow its melting in a mutual fite; Ger smiles to comfort; April showers to move Add all the nature, all the art of love.

—Parnell's Histor.

Yes, gentle time, thy gradual, healing hand Hath stolen from sorrow's grasp the envenom'd dart.

Submitting to thy skill, my passive heart Feels that no grief can thy soft power withstand; And tho' my aching breast still heaves the sigh, Though oft the tear swells silent in mine eye; Yet the keen pang, the agony is gone; Sorrow and I shall part; and these faint throws Are but the remnant of severer woes. -Mrs. Tight.
